Well-known provisions on the sense of justice are reduced to the fact that the sense of justice is considered as one of the forms of social consciousness, among other forms of it, among which, in the form of an open list, the consciousness is called political, moral, scientific, artistic, philosophical, etc. It is pointed out that in these forms people learn and master the world around them, objective reality, their own being, while each of the forms has its own subject, or, in other terminology, the area of reflection. In this article the author expresses a different point of view on legal consciousness, arguing that moral and legal consciousness are original representatives of consciousness as part of the natural world subordinated to natural laws. The co-evolution of moral and legal consciousness means that the processes of their change, the development from one state to another as the socio-economic progress of mankind proceed in parallel, conjugate, as coherent changes, which ideally should be harmonious.

Key words: legal consciousness, moral consciousness, sense of justice, society, co-evolution, morality, jurisprudence, law, law, socio-economic progress
